Presidents Report

Dear Members

We are looking forward to our Championship show in September, with Mr E Patterson from Ireland judging. Sandy has been busy organizing trophies for a while, and, as you will have seen from the photo in the magazine a few issues ago, lucky the exhibitor who wins one of these! Our Open Show on the same day is being judged by Mrs S Lippiatt; it is great for Open Show judges to have a good number of dogs from a particular breed to go over so please give both shows excellent entries.

In the March edition I mentioned the puppy farming in Ireland as being a big export earner for that country when many pups are sold to the rest of the EU. Australia has its own share of puppy farming, and many of the cute little dogs (the Bichon/Shih Tzu cross types) you see in pet shops in Perth come from the Eastern States, Victoria in particular. They are shipped over here at some very young age and sold for ridiculous amounts of money. I have mentioned before that some of these puppies have not been vaccinated (to save money) and the instructions that arrive with the pup advises the new owner to take a trip to the vet to get them vaccinated. I have also mentioned before that some puppies come with problems such as entropion or serious umbilical hernias. There are many pet shops that understand their responsibilities and do the right thing by the dog and the buyer, but there are also many others that are not interested in any follow up or back up for the puppies they sell. Once the pup is out of the door, that is that as far as the pet shop is concerned. My vet once told me that vets are 'damned if they do, damned if they don't' when it comes to being the referral point for the pet shops. They want to help the puppies, because that is their job, and also because the owners who are often naïve about dogs (why else would you buy one from a pet shop?) already adore their puppy. On the other hand if the vets do act as a referral point, then they are seen as endorsing this type of business.

In the same building as my office, but in a different department to me, there is a man who is visually impaired and who for years has been accompanied to the office every day by his seeing eye dog, a yellow Labrador. Everyone who works in the building and the neighbouring buildings is familiar with the two of them as they are a regular sight around the place. His colleagues take the dog out for a romp in the gardens a couple of times a day, and in between times the dog lies down in the between the desks patiently waiting for his next call to duty. A few weeks ago we all had an email to say the dog was retiring (as he had reached that sort of age), and was going to be staying at home as the family pet, but if anyone wanted to come and say their goodbyes, and many of us did, then to do it by a certain date. It was one farewell where everyone was universally sorry to say goodbye!

Until next time

Pauline

Secretary's Report

Hi Everyone

This is not so much a report but a list of things you need to consider..... and I am going to put it all in a larger font so that it stands out!!!

I have been on the pointy end of arranging shows in the past and I know just how much hard work is involved..... and how disconcerting it is to have to chase exhibitors for their entries so that you can put the catalogue together! Sandra has gone to a lot of trouble to source some lovely prizes and being such a small showing fraternity over here, we need to pull out all the stops to make it a memorable occasion.

This is going to be a very busy weekend as the Hound club show is on Sunday 12th and Mr Eddie Patterson will also be judging the Dachshunds and the Sighthound Club shows on the same weekend. Dogs West (your know – our Canine Association!) recently sent out a circular to all clubs reminding us that we must abide by the rules – no late acceptance of entries.

- The Club Championship and Open shows are going to be run on the 11th September 2010.
- The closing date for your entries is MONDAY 16th AUGUST 2010.
- Work starts on putting the catalogue together very soon.
- If you have been one of our sponsors you are entitled to some advertising space.
- If you haven't already helped with the sponsorship, please consider doing it

NOW....not in five weeks time!!

- Do not leave it to the last minute to send in the material to include in your advert!!
- Please offer your help – there are lots of jobs that your spare pair of hands can do to take the pressure off the committee.
- We are hoping to have a video of the event available for purchase. Show results and details will be in the September magazine.

How is this for a story – On the 27th June, a Ridgeback Rescue coordinator in the United States heard from a friend in Kalgoorlie that an emaciated ridgeback was being cared for by an animal welfare organization in Kalgoorlie. She emailed the South Australian club who passed the message on to us. The message was passed on to Anita who arranged for one of their puppy buyers living in the area to see the animal.

Always lurking on the fringes of ones mind, is the thought that this just could be a dog that had been previously reported as missing, and one keeps ones fingers crossed.

By the 28th June we found out that it was a serial escape artist and a wolfhound cross. But all this happened in the course of 2 days. Oh, the wonders of the internet, and the way everyone clicks into action when they think one of our own breed needs a hand!

Take care,

Kate

View from the Ridge

The dog that lived under the car in the Shark Bay caravan park got me to thinking about whether or not the car was purchased with the dog already in residence. Is this a good selling point, 'For sale – dog with free car cover'? What happens when the car is taken out for a drive? I can only assume the dog is removed and put in the car, or maybe the dog runs along behind the car? I waited eagerly to see what would happen to the dog in Shark Bay, but always missed the crucial moments when the car came and went.

I wonder what other dog type options you could buy for your car. There are houses with door bells, or motion sensors, that set off a recording of a dog barking loudly inside the house. This could be used for vehicles as well. If a person wanted to keep car thieves away but did not want dog nose scribbles and spit on all the windows, they could have the 'dog bark car alarm' for when someone started tampering with the doors. Depending on their fancy they could have the 'Great Dane' sonorous bark, or the hysterical small dog frenzy of yapping, or anything in between. The dog bark car alarm might not work so well with a ute, and it would have to be an automatic disqualification from entry into the 'dog in the ute' competition.

Speaking of dog accessories for cars, it seems to me that all of a sudden there are a lot of accessories for dogs. I have regularly kept you up to date with various things our owners can buy for us, and the latest Vet Products Direct catalogue features what can only be a Ridgeback very handsomely modelling a number of really snazzy looking coats. There are all different types, depending on whether the temperature is cold, or extremely cold, and whether or not the coat needs to be waterproof. The Ridgeback in the pictures looks most relaxed and comfortable in the various jackets, and is even shown running around in one of them – the 'Moleskin' for which the blurb goes 'Style and comfort; super soft suede, bonded to cosy boa fleece lining for warmth and comfort, belly wrap for extra warmth' etc (make of all that what you will). Other coats are 'strong showerproof or 'lightweight brushed cotton' and so on.

Possum's humans bought her an expensive and fully comprehensive smart red coat but it was not one of the above coats which had already been road tested by a Ridgeback. The trouble with Possum's one was that it came up her neck and down over her tail even though it was actually the absolutely correct size. She looked like some sort of charger horse from the Middle Ages and only needed a knight in shining armour with a jousting pole to complete the picture. Possum did not like the coat, and not just because her humans thought she looked hilariously funny in it and took photos of her (when they had stopped rolling around on the floor laughing). The coat also made it difficult for her to move about, so she quite refused to sit or lie down while it was on. Her humans decided that if they left it on her for long enough she would eventually get used to it and lie down or sit down - in other words Possum would give in. After long hours and hours and hours of her standing in the one spot as rigid as a statue and being thoroughly hang dog and miserable, they were the ones who relented and that was the end of the smart red coat. After that she got a much more manoeuvrable coat with which she was very happy. You can tell Possum is their first Ridgeback.

My humans have acquired a new grooming thing and I am not sure about it. My humans are sick of my massive moults and this thing is supposed to get rid of the old hair better than anything else. The wrapper shows pictures of dogs surrounded by great carpets of hair, allegedly all previously attached to them. Now normally I love being groomed, but this contraption is suspiciously scratchy and I think it is a close relative of the toe nail clippers but in some sort of disguise. There may have to be a lot of bribery involved before I submit willingly to its attentions.

Bye for now,

Thank you to everyone that entered.

Research Project at Murdoch University

Hello

I am a veterinarian currently undertaking a research project at Murdoch University on the diagnosis of neurological infections in dogs, specifically neosporosis and toxoplasmosis.

Neosporosis and toxoplasmosis cause many different signs of brain and neurological disease. Neosporosis particularly commonly affects young puppies, in which it can cause stretching out of the back legs, hind limb lameness (from a wobbly walk to paralysis), lameness or paralysis in all 4 legs, head tremors or seizures. Within a litter one or more puppies can be affected. There is much that is unknown about these infections, and the blood tests which are currently available can be difficult to interpret (e.g. some dogs with positive results will not have symptoms). My research project hopes to develop a more accurate test for diagnosing these infections than the blood tests which are currently available, to make it easier to diagnose and then treat these infections.

As part of my project, I require a small blood sample from dogs with the condition. This blood sample will be tested using the currently available standard tests and our new test. I am approaching veterinarians and breeders to ask for their assistance in identifying cases of the disease, hence I am asking that anyone who has or knows of a puppy or dog with these symptoms who would be willing to assist with my research, to please contact me using the details below. All dogs and owners involved would remain anonymous. In return for involvement in the project, we are offering a specialist consultation with a medicine clinician at Murdoch University Veterinary Hospital and the blood tests for the infections free of charge.

Thank you for your consideration. If you have any questions please let me know.

Dr Erin Bell

Antibody Titre Testing as an Alternative to Vaccination

By Mandy Thomson

It can be a difficult step for caring pet owners to choose not to revaccinate their dog/s on an annual basis, particularly if you have always done so. The facts are that adult dog Vaccination regimes aren't recommended to be a one size fits all approach anymore. There is serious concern regarding what is termed "over vaccination", and the meteoric rise in chronic ill health and immune system disease in modern pet dogs. However, fear of serious infectious disease is ever present, along with those fears in Vaccine safety.

There is a tool which may help you and your Veterinarian determine whether or not your RR requires revaccination at annual check up, that is an Antibody Titre Test.

Titre testing involves your Veterinarian taking a blood sample from your dog at the time of the annual health check (from either the jugular vein in the neck, or cephalic vein in the foreleg), and the blood sample is sent to the local Pathology Laboratory to be tested for the presence of Antibodies against the chosen diseases. The Antibodies detected and measured could have been generated by natural exposure to disease or by previous Vaccination. The test can't determine how the antibodies were created, but in terms of protection, it doesn't matter what causes the protective immune response. Antibody detection, regardless of how the antibodies are acquired, is defined as the body's humoral response to infectious disease.

Locally, Vetpath can perform Parvovirus and Distemper Antibody Titre Tests. Infectious Hepatitis Antibody Titre Tests still need to be sent to the UK. Antibody Titre Tests can be chosen on a single basis, or you might prefer to request Antibody titre tests for two, or all three infectious diseases usually covered by a C3 vaccine. The costs for Antibody Titre Testing will vary from one Veterinary Clinic to the next. The cost can be on a par with Vaccination, or it may well be higher, depending on the Clinic and the number of diseases which you are testing for. Obviously, including Infectious Hepatitis includes a small courier cost to the UK.

One part of immune protection against infectious disease which can't be tested is the body's cell mediated response. This is the body's "memory cells" ... which create the long lasting protection to infectious disease. However, Antibody Titre Testing remains a reasonable option as Pathologists are well versed in global standards and established research of what Antibody

Titre results are considered protective, borderline, or unprotective based on a great deal of research. Similarly, an Antibody Titre can identify the possibility of current infection. Don't forget, Quarantine Services around the world rely on Rabies Antibody Titre Testing (following Vaccination) in border security with the import and export of dogs. By and large, it's a reasonably reliable form of assessment.

Veterinarians are often concerned that dog owners will forego annual health checks with the removal of the annual revaccination regime. And it could well be true that fear of infectious disease is what keeps some dog owners making that annual vet visit. And it's still true that most dogs in our communities are NEVER vaccinated or receive regular health checks. Unfortunately, our communities never come close to achieving the notion of "herd immunity". It's suggested that this is because we keep targeting the same dogs and owners for Annual revaccination, rather than trying to vaccinate the NEVER vaccinated.

Annual health checks should always feature in the care of your RR to detect, prevent, and treat any diseases or other ailments as early as possible. Your RR's good health is also imperative if he/she is to maintain a good response to any exposure to infectious disease.

CAWA Dog Clubs accept Antibody Titre Testing as proof of current immunity to disease, and increasingly there are "aware" Boarding facilities, Groomers, Dog Day Care facilities who will accept Antibody Titre results as proof of immunity to disease. Some of course may require that you still vaccinate annually for Canine Cough. Although many facilities understand that if your decision to limit vaccinations (or not vaccinate your adult dog at all) is due to an adverse reaction to a previous vaccination, they will happily waive a Canine Cough Vaccine requirement, as long as your dog is in otherwise good health and can produce evidence of protection for all other infectious diseases via Antibody Titre Testing.

At the end of the day, it's down to your position on Annual revaccination and an approach to your RR's health maintenance which is comfortable for you.

Example 1: The first test was in 2005 and shows that the titre is high enough to be protected.

<small> CSIRO Pathology Pty Ltd AC/IC 094 100 902 ABN: 84 280 411 429 </small>	Date: 22/06/2005 Species: Canine 8500 850
Tests: Adenovirus UK Dist+Parvo no hep	Specimens: Blood - D

CANINE PARVOVIRUS IFA SEROLOGY TITRE: =1:5
 CANINE DISTEMPER VIRUS IFA SEROLOGY TITRE: =1:20

INTERPRETATION: This test is a screening test to determine the level of specific antiviral IgG in the serum. The titre is used as a measure of the humoral immunity.

It has been shown that a titre of 1:5 on IFA is comparable to the 1:32 titre determined by VN for CDV and 1:80 titre by HAI for CPV. These are considered the appropriate levels to provide protective immunity. Note that it is possible that lower titres are protective and the influence of the cell mediated response cannot be reliably assessed in this manner.

- * Dogs with a titre of <1:5 may not be adequately protected and should be revaccinated.
- * Dogs with a titre of 1:5 but <1:20 should consider revaccination.
- * Dogs with a titre of 1:20 or greater are considered protected and may not need revaccination. These dogs should have their titre rechecked in approximately one year.

JAVMA 2000;217:1021-1024

VIRUS NEUTRALISATION TEST FOR CANINE ADENOVIRUS ANTIBODIES: TITRE 113

INTERPRETATION:
IN A VACCINATED DOG - On the basis of available publications current advice is that antibody titres of >= 80 for distemper, parvovirus and adenovirus serology are usually protective.

IN A CLINICAL INVESTIGATION -
 Any antibody titre is likely to be a specific finding. Interpretation depends on factors such as age of the animal (maternal antibodies), vaccination history and clinical signs. Definitive diagnosis may only be possible with paired samples 2 weeks apart looking for a rising titre (4 fold change).

Example 2: The test was in 2008 on the same dog as in Example 1. These results show that the titre is high enough to be protected. Interestingly the antibody levels have increased.

<small> ABN: 84 007 190 043 </small>	Date: 8/12/2008 Species: Canine 19700 1970

CANINE PARVOVIRUS IFA SEROLOGY TITRE: >=1:80
 CANINE DISTEMPER IFA SEROLOGY TITRE: >=1:80

INTERPRETATION: This test is a screening test to determine the level of anti-parvovirus and anti-distemper virus IgG in the serum. The titres are used as a measure of the humoral immunity.

It has been shown that a titre of 1:5 on IFA is considered the minimum level to provide protective immunity. Note that it is possible that lower titres are still protective and the influence of the cell mediated response cannot be reliably assessed in this manner.

- * Dogs with a titre of <1:5 may have suboptimal protection and therefore should be revaccinated.
- * Dogs with a titre of 1:5 but <1:20 should consider revaccination.
- * Dogs with a titre of 1:20 or greater are considered protected and may not need revaccination. These dogs should have their titre rechecked in approximately one year.

Visit to the pub that was dogged by disaster

Thanks to Sonia Soans for sending in this newspaper article from 1998.

Daily Mail, Friday, March 13, 1998
Visit to the pub that was dogged by disaster.
Daily Mail Reporter

THE scenario is familiar. A car careers out of control, its young occupants clearly unqualified and oblivious to the potential dangers of motoring.

But the trail of destruction left by this Ford Mondeo was not the usual tale of teenage tearaways behind the wheel. Rather a case of a puppy tearing off more than it could chew.

The dog in question, a young Rhodesian Ridgeback called Dindindy, had been left in the Mondeo along with a German Shepherd police dog, Brook, by owner Kate Wilson.

Kate, 34, who runs the Ramshaw Rescue Kennels near Bishop Auckland, County Durham, had driven south to visit her brother Simon, landlord of a pub in the tiny and normally tranquil village of Perrots Brook, Gloucestershire.

Kate took the dogs for a quick walk before putting them back in the car - parked on a hill in the village - and striding out towards her brother's hostelry, The Bear.

Unfortunately, young Dindindy became restless - and started to chew through the car's handbrake.

The result proved nothing short of calamitous. The Mondeo rolled down the hill, picked up speed as it entered the centre of the village, crossed a main road, lurched into the car park of Simon's pub and demolished a Grade II listed building before finally coming to a halt.

Kate said the dogs had been in the car for a mere five minutes when she nipped into Simon's pub to see if she could bring the muddy animals inside. She added: 'The next thing we heard was an almighty crash.'

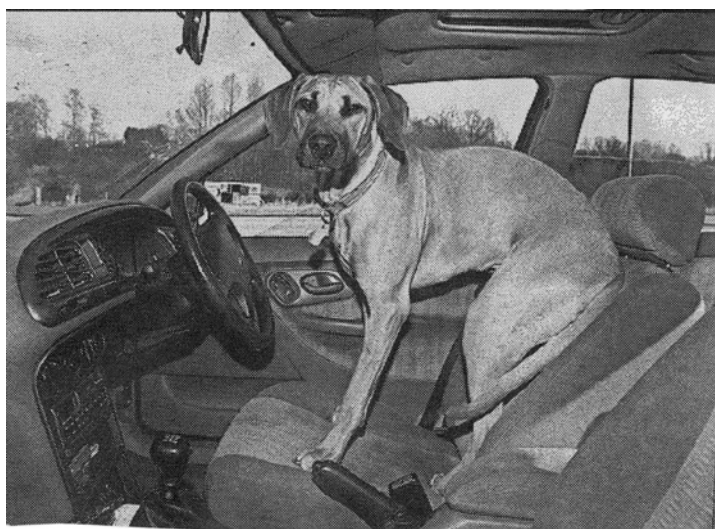

One wall of the building had fallen on top of the car and Kate and Simon were only able to rescue the dogs by opening the hatchback.

The damaged building, which doubles as a garage and woodshed, dates back to 1517 and belongs to Simon.

He said: 'At first I thought it was my sister's dodgy parking but then I realised who the real culprits were.'

Kate said: 'I'm all for bringing back dog licences but I don't think they should be allowed to drive!'

Dindindy is insured for third party liability, she said, but she's not so sure whether her car insurance covers dogs driving. 'Both the dogs are bitches so I'm bracing myself for the jokes about women drivers,' she added.

Love My Dog Metal Art Images

Contemporary metal art images for home and garden crafted in W.A.

Animals, all breeds of dogs, cats, horses. Also trees, house numbers, welcome signs, logos and virtually any other sign imaginable can be laser cut. We have thousands of images already available. Any font can be offered.

For the dog lover, at your home entrance, on a fence, gate, garage or studio - anywhere you want to show the love of your dog. Popular with dog breeders and kennels.

All sizes, bracket or flat signs from steel sheet or in brass, copper or stainless steel.
Powder coated or natural finish to enable weathering.

For truly personalized articles, send an image and our technician will create a recognizable silhouette of your choice.

Images emailed for your approval prior to commencement.
